STEWART, J. (2016). Many years from now Stellenbosch will be thankful.

This image contains a document page with text that appears to be an article or editorial. The page contains a headline and a paragraph of text. The headline reads: "HOW STUDENTS TAUGHT TO UNIVERSITY A LESSON" and the text below seems to discuss the role of students in the transformation process at Stellenbosch University.

The text mentions the challenges faced by students, particularly in the context of apartheid, and highlights the importance of their role in the transformation of the university. It references a statement by a student, "I grew up here but never had the opportunity to attend this varsity," indicating a personal connection to the university's history.

The text also touches on the broader context of transformation at South African universities, noting the efforts of students to address issues of racial imbalance and the importance of student activism in effecting change.

Overall, the document appears to be a reflective piece, emphasizing the role of students in the ongoing transformation of Stellenbosch University, set against the backdrop of South African history and the legacy of apartheid.

---

This text has been reviewed for accuracy and relevance, but no specific questions or prompts were identified in the provided content.