Module assistant	R83.92
Learning assistant	R100.80
Teaching assistant/Assessment assistant	R111.99

Important is to take note of the various roles of the possible student facilitator appointments:

- o Module assistant performs only administrative and/or module support functions. These may include but are not limited to the preparation of class lists, the allocation of students to small groups, the uploading of materials to SUNLearn or other platforms used in the particular module, the preparation of videos/podcasts/PowerPoints, audio-visual support in class and test invigilation. Excluded from the module assistant's responsibilities are teaching and learning engagements with students, development of teaching and learning materials and assessment (summative and formative) of student learning.
- o Learning assistant roles can include some administrative functions as set out in the responsibilities of module assistants. However, the primary role of the learning assistant is to support student learning. This may include but is not limited to supporting students during practical's, facilitating small group discussions, guiding students in the solution of prescribed problems/exercises and student consultations. Excluded from the learning assistant's responsibilities are primary teaching, secondary teaching, the development of student learning materials and summative assessment of student learning (this includes developing summative assessments as well as marking these assessments). Where learning assistants engage in formative assessment, the dictates of SU's Assessment policy should be adhered to, including the requirement that the learning assistant receive appropriate training.
- o Teaching assistant roles can include those of a learning assistant. Additional to these, teaching assistant's responsibilities include but are not limited to the development of formative exercises and solutions (but excludes the scheduling of such formative opportunities – this remains the responsibility of the lecturer/module coordinator), secondary teaching (all such instances must be approved by the coordinating lecturer of the module) and limited primary teaching (see restrictions below). Excluded from the teaching assistant's responsibilities are the setting of summative assessments. Teaching assistants may only make a limited contribution to the marking of summative assessments. As part of the implementation of these regulations faculties are to develop clear guidelines that indicate the limitations of teaching assistants' involvement in summative assessment as well as the supervision and moderation required for them to engage in assessments. A clear distinction should be made between marking that requires only a memorandum with single possibility answers and marking that requires interpretive inputs from the teaching assistant. The teaching assistant's involvement in the latter should be limited.
