Student voice is not always heard or articulated. However, student voice can potentially feed into the design, implementation, and evaluation of institutional academic and non-academic student support and success programmes and interventions.

There are three conceptualisations of student voice, in the design, implementation and review of student support programmes and interventions at institutional level; as partners, as producers of new insights/knowledge and as change agents in Higher Education (HE). These conceptualisations apply to the University of Kwa-Zulu Natal Academic Monitoring and Support (AMS) programmes and interventions aimed at student success.

Students (undergraduate and postgraduate), student support practitioners, academics and researchers are kindly invited to submit an abstract of research, theoretical, conceptual or reflective papers on the overarching colloquium theme, guided by any of the following sub-themes:

- Student voice in the design, implementation and review of student support programmes
- Student voice as partner in knowledge creation
- Student voice as producers of new insights and knowledge
- Student voice as change agents
- Any other relevant theme on student voice
